ROLE PLAY

By Alan Ayckbourn

The London docklands apartments have new occupants. Julie-Ann Jobson and Justin Lazenby have been living together and are awaiting the arrival of their respective and assorted parents. They plan to make the announcement of their intended wedding over a quite well rehearsed dinner party. Seems simple enough, but Ayckbourn's plays are never simple and the latest, RolePlay lives up to this reputation.

Two people with different upbringings start to show the differences and Justin begins to notice Julie-Ann's little family traits, that are funny at first and then start to irritate. A lost fork gets the evening off to a good start as a hysterical Julie rushes out to buy a replacement. Left alone contemplating his fate Justin hears a noise on the balcony. Investigating he finds a dishevelled girl who has climbed down from above.

Two unexpected visitors arrive and from this moment on chaos reigns.

With the arrival of the parents, the ingredients are set for an intriguing evening.

Christmas Pantomime

Dick Whittington and His Cat

December 7th, 8th, 9th 10th evening, December 10th matinee

Our Christmas Pantomime journey takes us from the Rat infested shores of the River Thames in London through the Oceans and on to exotic Morocco. Our hero Dick Whittington has to banish some very bad rats from the city, save the beautiful Alice's father from ruin, rescue the Sultan from the clutches of Ratman & Bobin. All this and he still finds time to sing a few songs tell a few jokes and most importantly slap that thigh.

Auditions for the Panto take place on October 17th & 20th here at St Michaels Hall from 8pm, come along and have a try.

Our tickets for the Panto sell very quickly so if you would like us to contact you about making a booking, or if you would like to receive future mailers about St Michael's Players events then please tear off the bottom of this page and hand it to a member of the group. St Michael's Players will not use your contact details for anything other than information about our events.
